

Contractors Changing Safety Procedures to Protect Workers and the Public

Contractors Association of West Virginia members are doing their part to protect their workers and the public now that the coronavirus has introduced unprecedented challenges in our everyday work and personal lives. Ever since Gov. Jim Justice identified construction as one of the sectors allowed to continue operating in order to keep West Virginia's economy strong, CAWV members have created comprehensive new safety plans to change the way construction operates in order to maintain that commitment to safety.

We are working safe so we can expand health care facilities, build schools and maintain critical infrastructure such as highways and airports. CAWV members are keeping their employees safe so the general public can stay safe.

To learn more about how the construction industry is "Hard at Work" every day building West Virginia in a safe manner, go to the CAWV's website at www.cawv.org and workingsafe.agc.org.